Ministry Of Higher Education

Foreword

The first step towards joining the knowledge society is naturally taken at the path of education, as it is the primary pillar of any nation's progress. Hence, the Ministry of Higher Education has already taken wide strides to assure both availability and quality of higher education.

To assure quality, a law was issued, in June 2006, stipulating the establishment of the National Authority for Education Quality Assurance and Accreditation. Later, the law's executive regulation was also issued in January 2007. The complete staff nomination of this Authority is taking place, so as to be a fully effective mechanism that assures the realization of an outstanding level of quality in the Egyptian higher education institutions. This realization will not only bridge the gap between these institutions and the most distinguished international educational institutions, but also can achieve equal pace with them.

In this regard, on one side, the Egyptian Universities have taken the initiative, in 2003, by beginning the implementation of the Quality Assurance and Accreditation Project. Up till now, a number of centers for performance evaluation and quality assurance have been established within each university, in addition of preparing the academic criteria system for some specializations in a great number of faculties. Hence, the ground will be intrinsically set for the application of the quality and accreditation criteria as soon as the National Authority for Education Quality Assurance and Accreditation is fully effective.

On another side, since September 2006, discussions and deliberations have been conducted in the university-professors, intellectuals and legislators circles, and, naturally, the public opinion, on the proposed perspective of developing the governing legislations of the higher education institutions, hoping to result in having an integrated visualization of a referential framework governing all institutions and types of higher education. These discussions must take their time, so as to have the end result shaped in the form of a new legislation or amending the current one.

Linked with this is the first set of a master plan for the system of higher education till 2022, envisioning the demand volume on higher education, and distributing its institutions geographically and in-kind. In this regard, the 'Strategic Planning Unit' in the Ministry of Higher Education, has been established to continuously review the master plan.

This new edition of the "Faculties and Higher Institutes in the Arab Republic of Egypt" addresses a wide sector of specialists and stakeholders, aiming to provide a comprehensive directory of the Egyptian higher education institutions, which have been widely increased in number. So far, State and Private Universities are 32, encompassing 418 Faculty and Institute, in addition to Al-Azhar University, which encompasses 62 Faculty. The Technological Colleges are 8, encompassing 45 intermediate institute, the Private Higher Institutes are 110, in addition to other types of higher education institutions.

Finally, we are all hopes that this directory will be of great help, and that the Egyptian higher education sector add more and more achievements within the framework of its ascribed mission, and the overall national development plans.

Ministry of Higher Education

Introduction

The Egyptian higher education sector witnesses nowadays unprecedented progressive developments, characterizing all fields of the educational and research process in universities and higher institutes. This is crystallized in the quantative incremental increase of the higher education institutions number, the qualitative upgrade of all components of the system, the enhancement of scientific research capabilities in universities and institutes, and the other development and modernization efforts that aim to make the Egyptian higher education system lead the train of development and progress and be an active instrument in realizing the sustainable development for the welfare of the nation and the citizens.

Within the framework of the higher education system, which is clearly crystallized in the form of a vast comprehensive map of state and private universities, technological colleges and private higher institute, higher education institutes, which are based on protocols with other sister and friendly countries, publishing a directory covering the basic information of each institution, its establishment and nature of study, its departments, the scientific degrees it grants, its correspondence information and admission rules, has become a pressing demand, and a work that is being anticipated by all the concerned circles in higher education in Egypt, as a guiding map on the Egyptian higher education system. This directory (book) is being issued since 2000, the year of the first edition of "A Guide on Faculties and Institutes in the Arab republic of Egypt".

In presenting this updated edition, wishing to meet each and every reader's expectations, we extend our deepest appreciation to H.E Dr. Hany Helal, Minister of Higher Education for his proper directions, and express our heartfelt thanks to the work group who has been sincerely dedicated to produce this book, hoping for all the staff working in the higher education sector each and every success, and for our homeland more and more progress and prosperity.

Ministry of Higher Education

The Ministry of Higher Education

The Ministry of Higher Education establishment goes back to 1961. According to the Presidential Decree No. 1665/1961, modified by Decree No. 270/1997, responsibilities and organization of the Ministry are identified, which are based on eight tracks:

First Track: Vocational Training Centres

The affiliation of these centers were transferred to the Ministry, which, in turn, worked on their development by increasing the study duration from nine months up to two years, and they were renamed into the "Technicians Preparation Institutes" at the academic year 1966/1967. Ten years later, they were further developed to be Technical Institutes, until, recently, they were clustered, according to geographical and economic criteria, into eight technological colleges. Study started at these colleges at the academic year 2004/2005, of which the educational and information infrastructure is being, and will be, developed till the end of 2009, within the framework of the higher education enhancement projects, in collaboration with the World Bank..

Second Track: Establishment of Higher Institutes

Law No. 49/1963 was issued, stipulating one of the Ministry's responsibilities, which is the establishment of colleges and higher institutes, and organizing the working procedures of establishing state colleges and higher institutes affiliated to the Ministry. Eventually, a number of industrial, agricultural and commercial institutes has been established, and, in consequent phases, these institutes became annexed to universities.

Third Track: Establishment of State Universities

Upon issuance of Law. No. 49/1972, organizing state universities' affairs, many state universities were established. They are 17 university at present. It is worth mentioning that it is the fourth law issued to organize universities' affairs, and the only law issued after the establishment of the Ministry of Higher Education.

Fourth Track: Establishment of Private Higher Institutes

The establishment of private higher institutes was based on community efforts, at the same period of establishing the first faculties of the 'Egyptian University'. To organize these institutes' affairs, which are so far 110 institute, Law No. 52/1970 was issued. Recently, it has been called for the establishment of a number of private higher and technological institutes all over the Egyptian Governorates, within the master plan framework of the higher education institutions till 2021.

Fifth Track: Organizing the Study Missions Affairs

Law No. 112/1959 was issued to organize the study missions' affairs, aiming to expand the external missions. Studies are conducted currently, aiming at setting a new law, within the framework of the development project implemented at the Cultural Affairs and Missions Sector.

Ministry of Higher Education

Sixth Track: Establishment of Private Universities

Law. No. 101/1992 was issued, organizing private universities' affairs, in light of which, a number of private universities were established. The first academic year at these universities was 1996/1997. They are 15 university at present, 14 of which are working up till the academic year 2006/2007.

Seventh Track: The Egyptian National Committee for UNESCO

The Presidential Decree No. 1588/1967, modified by Decree No. 480/1991, stipulates the responsibilities and organization of the Egyptian National Committee for UNESCO, as a linking body between the UNESCO, ALECSO, ISESCO, in one hand, and the state concerned bodies in Educational, Cultural and Scientific affairs. The Committee is headed by the Minister of Higher Education.

Eighth Track: Academy of the Arabic Language

Law No. 433/1955, modified by the Presidential Decree No. 1144/1960, stipulates the responsibilities and organization of the Academy of the Arabic Language. It was first presided by the Minister of Education, then, after the establishment of the Ministry of Higher Education, it has been presided by the Minister of Higher Education.

Finally, it is worth mentioning that the Ministry of Higher Education has played a crucial role in the revival project of the Alexandria Library, at its initiation phase when its establishment was just a mere idea, till the issuance of the Presidential Decree No. 1/2002, stipulating the affiliation of the Library directly to the State Presidency.

Development of Higher Education in Egypt

Egypt is truly considered the cradle of knowledge and civilization. The old Library of Alexandria was a unique edifice in the Egyptian land, serving as a great university, in concept, at that time. In the Tenth Century, Al-Azhar was established in the Fatemian era (969 a.c). This institution is considered the first attempt to establish a comprehensive entity of a university, not only in Egypt, but in the entire world, in consideration of the patterns of learning and promotion applied, which have been lately adopted at almost all universities of the world. In the framework of that system, as soon as the student was enrolled in Al-Azhar, he was given a per-diem plus food allowance during the study period. The promotion was based on the shift from a student to a lecturer reciting Al-Sheikh's lessons, to a discussion circle leader, which was developed later as a chair professor.

Since its establishment and so far, Al-Azhar has given great care to teaching religious and secular lessons. The most unique characteristic of Al-Azhar is that the core of university life is truly adopted there, all along its history, and its mission has not only proved to be usefully applicable for Egypt, but all the other countries, and its fame has extended as the greatest meeting-point for students in both the Arab and Islamic world.

One of the other attempts for establishing higher education institutions in the subsequent eras was during the Salageqa period in the 11th century in the form of initiating 'Nezameya' (regular) schools, after the name of Minister "Nezam Al-Malek". Later, the establishment of schools went on and on in the Ayoubian and Mamloukian eras during the 12th century. This type of schools was targeted not only to teach legislative sciences, but other subjects as well. Hence, they played the same significant role which universities play at the modern time.

Afterwards, 1805 was crucial in the Egyptian modern history, as Mohammad Ali, who ruled the country at that year, managed to establish a number of basic pillars which enabled Egypt to successfully set the higher education system at a later stage. In addition to giving directions for the formation of committees to select the excelled students to join high schools, he set a mission system for the distinguished ones to travel to the leading foreign states at that time. His era also witnessed the establishment of a number of high schools, such as the High School of Engineering (1816), High School of Agriculture (1823), High School of Medicine and Veterinary Medicine (1827), High School of Pharmacy (1829), High School of Accounting (1837). These Schools constituted the roots which nourished and formed the base of university education in the twentieth century.

However, Mohammed Ali's ambitions and attempts were not only hindered when the London Treaty was signed in 1841, but they were completely diminished and educational development was disregarded by almost all his successors, except, his grandson Ismael Pasha, who ruled Egypt in 1863. During his office, Mohammad Ali's achievements were revitalized and the importance of education was re-emphasized. The Government, at that time, continued the establishment of Specialized and High Schools and the finance of study costs and accommodation. Furthermore, the number of missions to Europe significantly increased, and Ismael Pasha adopted his grandfather's strategy concerning the establishment of High Schools. In 1872, Dar El-Ulum (Arabic Studies) was established. During his office, the Egyptian distinguished scholar Ali Mubarak Pasha, head of the Schools Divan, established the Khedivial Dar Al-Kotoub – the great Public Library – in 1870, in addition to a spacious hall in which public lectures were given covering almost all branches of science. The hall served as the meeting point for professors and students. This attempt, if given more care, would have been a unique nucleus for the first Egyptian university. Eventually, Ismael Pasha effectively enabled Egypt to be one of the advanced countries at that time. Therefore, his ambitions were once more hindered, just like his grandfathers'.

The last two decades of the Ninetieth Century witnessed a recess period regarding education, as Egypt was occupied by England, during which the educational efforts were diminished and education was limited to a certain social class. However, as a retaliatory response, a civilian patriotic movement was created, and one of its successful efforts was the continuation of the external missions, that however, were decreased and allocated only to ten scholars.

At the eve of the Twentieth Century, the national struggle was linked to opposing the educational strategies of the occupation forces, and calling for a national educational system to serve the Egyptians, for the country had already possessed a deeply-rooted base as mentioned earlier. 1906 has witnessed the attempt of establishing the first public Egyptian university, which was officially inaugurated in 1908. Prince Ahmad Fouad was chosen as the University President before assuming any royal responsibilities. Therefore, that year witnessed the true initiation of the Egyptian university education on the modern times.

During World War I, the Ministry of Public Knowledge (Ministry of Education, at present) had an ample chance to organize the whole educational process. Thus, the educational circles were turned into state primary schools, and the Ministry considered the clustering of High Schools into a university, as a response to the trend towards establishing the American University in Cairo. On 27/02/1917, the Cabinet agreed, in principle, on the project of establishing the first state university. Then, a committee was formed to study the matter. Later, it submitted a report in November 1917 which the Ministry kept as the conditions were not convenient for taking the required procedures.

In 1922, in the wake of declaring the Egyptian Kingdom and on the occasion of the ceremonial festivals of King Ahmad Fouad's sitting on the throne of Egypt, he proposed transforming the public university into a state one. Negotiations regarding this matter began and the Government reconsidered the kept report. Eventually, the public university was handed over to the Ministry of Education in December 1923.

Hence, it could be stated that the state higher education in Egypt dates back to 1925, the year of the first state Egyptian University's establishment "Cairo University, at present". Then, Farouk the First University "Alexandria University, at present" was established in 1942, after which Ibrahim Pasha University "Ain-Shams University, at present" was established in 1950. The affairs of each university was governed by an independent law, in addition to a number of laws governing all the other affairs. The Consultative Council for Universities was established upon issuance of Law No. 496/1950, acting as the coordinating body among universities.

Shortly after the break of the 1952 Revolution, the first unified law for universities (Law No. 508/1954) was issued as a replace for the existing number of laws, in light of which the Supreme Council of Universities replaced the Consultative Council for Universities.

After the lapse of two years, two other laws were issued to organize universities' performance. The first is Law No. 345/1956, and the second is Law No. 184/1958. During that period, and in 1957, Assiut University was established as the first University in Upper Egypt.

In 1963, the trend of spreading university education all over the Egyptian governorates was stressed, so as to settle students at their home town, and to reduce inner immigration. A branch of the Faculty of Medicine, Cairo University was established in Mansoura. Another branch of the Faculty of Medicine, Alexandria University was established in Tanta. Shortly, a branch of Cairo University was established in Mansoura, another of Alexandria University in Tanta, a third of Ain-Shams University in Zagazig.

In 1969, the East Delta University in Mansoura and the Middle Delta University in Tanta, which was renamed later 'Orabi University', was established in Zagazig. Afterwards, it was decided that universities should be named after the governorate to which each belongs. Hence, the three universities were renamed into Mansoura University, Tanta University, Zagazig University.

In 1980, the Higher Institutes which were affiliated to the Ministry of Higher Education, were decided to be affiliated to Universities, and the Higher Institutes located in Cairo to be clustered into a technological university, called later Helwan University, which had a branch in Alexandria, at that time, encompassing the existing faculties. However, it took the form of the other universities, and the faculties of Helwan University branch in Alexandria were affiliated later to Alexandria University.

Cairo University

It was inaugurated, as a public university, on 21 December 1908, in a great celebration that was held at the Hall of the Legislative Council of Laws (El Shoura). It was attended by Khedive Abbas the Second, who was accompanied by a number of high officials and celebrities. On the evening of the inauguration day, study at the University started by giving lectures. At that time, the University had not yet been allocated a permanent campus. Therefore, lectures were given in a number of scattered halls, the location of which were announced on the daily newspapers. Examples of these halls are the hall of the Shoura Council, the High Schools Club and Dar Al Garida (the Newspaper Building), until the University was given a location at Nestor Janakliz Palace which is occupied by the American University in Cairo at present. As a result of the financial problems the University underwent during World War I, its building was moved to Mohamed Sedky's Palace in Al-Azhar Square in Falaki Street in order to economize the expenses.

The new-born University struggled to stand on its feet, and in order to create a base of staff members, it sent some of its excelled students to the European Universities to get Ph.D degrees, then come back to teach modern sciences. Heading those academic delegates were Taha Hussein, Mansour Fahmi and Ahmed Deif.

A library was established at the University containing precious great books that had been donated to the University from internal and external bodies.

As a result of the public University's success in realizing the great hopes of Egyptians, the government, in 1917, decided to establish a state university. For this purpose, a committee was formed, which recommended that the high schools should be annexed to the University. So, on 12/02/1923, the School of Law and the School of Medicine were annexed to the University. Then, an agreement was passed between the government and the administration of the public university. In accordance with this agreement, the public university would be merged into the new university, and the Faculty of Arts would be a nucleus of the new state university. On 11/03/1925, a decree was issued to establish a state university under the name of the "Egyptian University", comprising four faculties: Arts, Science, Medicine and Law. At the same year, the School of Pharmacy was annexed to the Faculty of Medicine.

In 1928, the University began to establish a permanent campus at the location that the government had been given in compensation for the terrain which had been endowed to the University by Princess Fatima, Khedevi Ismael's daughter. On 22/08/1935, Royal Decree No. 91 was issued affecting the incorporation of the Higher Schools of Engineering, Agriculture, Commerce and Veterinary Medicine into the Egyptian University. On 31/10/1935, a decree was issued to annex the Institute of Aquatics to the Egyptian University. In 1938, The School of Veterinary Medicine was separated from the Faculty of Medicine as an independent faculty.

On 23/05/1940, Law No. 27 was issued to change the name of the Egyptian University into the "University of Fouad the First".

On 24/04/1942, Law No. 23 was issued to annex Dar El - Ulum Faculty to the University.

On 28/09/1953, a decree was issued to rename the university from "Fouad the First University" to "Cairo University" (its present name).

In 1955, the Department of Pharmacy and the Department of Dentistry were separated from the Faculty of Medicine, becoming two separate faculties. In the same year, a branch of Cairo University was established in Khartoum. So, the University's flag was fluttered at the south of the valley.

Afterwards, the establishment of faculties came in succession. The first academic year at the Faculty of Economics and Political Science was 1960-1961. In 1962, the Institute of Statistical Studies and the Research Institute was established. At the same year, the Institute of Physiotherapy was established, and in January 1992, it turned into the Faculty of Physiotherapy. In 1964, the Higher Institute of Nursing was established and annexed to the Faculty of Medicine, and on April 2000, it was renamed into the Faculty of Nursing, and became affiliated to the University. In 1969, the National Tumor Institute was established.

In 1970, the Faculty of Mass Communication, the Institute of Archaeology and the Institute of African Studies and Research were founded. In 1979, the Institute of Regional and Urban Planning was established and in 1991, it was renamed into "the Faculty of Regional and Urban Planning". In 1987, the Institute of Educational Studies and Research was established. In 1994, the National Institute of Laser Science was founded. In 1995, the Faculty of Computer Science and Information was established, upon issuance of the Presidential Decree No. 419/1995.

Alexandria University

Ministry of Higher Education

Alexandria University

Shortly after the establishment of Cairo University, it became overcrowded with students. The increasing crowdedness of students at Cairo University was the main factor behind the establishment of Alexandria University. Furthermore, Alexandrians were looking for their right of university education without being exposed to the hardness of traveling. Thus, the two ideas complemented each other, namely:

- The idea of expansion in students' admission, which was adopted by the Republic.
- The idea of maintaining the educational process standard, which was adopted by the University.

Therefore, it was natural that 'Fouad the First University Council' agreed on establishing two branches for both the Faculty of Arts and the Faculty of Law in Alexandria, specially that the intensity of students in these two Faculties was very high at Cairo University.

Considering the necessity of spreading higher education among Alexandrian people, 'Farouk The First University' was established in August 1942, including the above mentioned Faculties. Then, another four faculties were added: the Faculties of Science, Commerce, Agriculture and Medicine. Later, in 1952, the University was renamed into 'Alexandria University'.

Afterwards, the University of Alexandria witnessed a great development reflected in the establishment of:

The Faculty of Nursing (1954), the Faculty of Pharmacy (1956), the Higher Institute of Public Health (1963), the Faculty of Education (1969), the Faculty of Dentistry (1971), the Medical Research Institute (1971), the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine in Edfina (1974), Institute of Postgraduate Studies and Research (1983), the Faculty of Tourism and Hotels (1983).

Believing in the pioneer role of the University in spreading science and culture, and in fulfillment of the aim towards utilizing its geographical location in view of its national role, Alexandria University established, in the Nile Delta area, three Faculties:

- Faculty of Medicine in Tanta (1962).
- Faculty of Science in Tanta (1969).
- Faculty of Agriculture in Kafr El-Sheikh (1969).

Furthermore, in Damanhour City (West of Delta area) the following Faculties were established:

- Faculty of Education (1980).
- Faculties of Arts, Agriculture and Commerce (1983).

In September 1989, the following Faculties and Institutes of Helwan University were annexed to Alexandria University:

Faculty of Physical Education (Males), Faculty of Physical Education (Females), Faculty of Fine Arts, Faculty of Agriculture in Saba Pasha.

In 1991, the Faculty of Education in Matrouh City (300 Km west of Alex.), was established.

Ministry of Higher Education

Ain Shams University

It is the third University founded in the Arab Republic of Egypt. On July 1950, Law No. 93 was issued to establish Ibrahim Pasha the Great University in Cairo, to contribute in fulfilling the mission of university education together with the two earlier Universities: Fouad the First and Farouk the First Universities (Cairo and Alexandria Universities, at present) and to meet the increasing demand of the youth on higher education. When it was established, the University encompassed a number of distinguished academic institutes, which were later developed and converted into University Faculties.

In the wake of the 23rd of July Revolution, it was deemed better to call the Universities with names strongly associated with the nation and its historical landmarks. So, on 21/02/1954, it was renamed Heliopolis University.

In 1954, however, it was agreed to make the name familiar for citizens. Therefore, it was changed into its present name: "Ain - Shams", which is the Arabic meaning of the name of the city of "ON" or Heliopolis, whose University was considered to be the oldest one in history, that had been established approximately 5000 years ago. This University has enjoyed a great fame as an academic centre, especially in Astronomy, Engineering and Medicine.

Ministry Of Higher Education

The Upper Egyptians had long dreamt of having a University Campus at their land. Eventually, their dream became a reality. In spite of the fact that the establishment of a university helps in realizing the broad development objectives, via the preparation of well qualified graduates needed for the labour market, in addition to providing the academic research institutions with qualified cadres, its establishment in Assuit, the capital of Upper Egypt was, at the same time, aiming at realizing the following purposes:

1 - To disseminate University and Higher Education,
2 - To secure equal access to University Education,
3 - To promote Upper Egypt,
4 - To realize civil development.

In 1949, the Committee of National Celebrations in the Ministry of Public Knowledge (the Ministry of Education, at present), on the occasion of Mohamed Ali's Anniversary, proposed a project to establish a university in Assiut Governorate called Mohamed Ali University. The Cabinet agreed, and Law No. 156/1949 was issued to affect the beginning of a preparatory period, the duration of which should be between 4:7 years to provide the necessary requirements for study to start. The law stipulated that the University would consist of the following Faculties:

- Faculty of Arts
- Faculty of Agriculture
- Faculty of Commerce
- Faculty of Medicine
- Faculty of Law
- Faculty of Engineering
- Faculty of Science

But this project had not been implemented and remained as an idea and a hope for Upper Egyptians. Later, it was decided to establish another University in Cairo, namely, Ain- Shams University, so the project of Assiut University was suspended, despite the fact that some external missions had been sent, to constitute the staff nucleus.

Then, in 1955, the project of Assiut University was revived as one of the 1952 Revolution repercussions: external academic missions were sent, and the project was re-studied for implementation. So, two principal committees were formed, to prepare a study for the organization of the scientific faculties. Subordinate committees were also formed to study the establishment of scientific departments, and to set a plan for the staff selection, and the means of supplying laboratories, scientific equipments, books and references, etc., so that study in the University could begin in October 1957.

These pre-academic year comprehensive studies aimed at defining the needs of Upper Egypt and determining to what extent the material and human capacities are secured, besides making use of the experiences of other Universities.

The preparatory studies concluded that the University should be established on the basis of the Unified Academic Departments System, without having corresponding departments that exist at the other different faculties. This trend led to reducing the staff number, buildings and equipments, as well as an observed increase in sufficiency of departments and in their readiness to teach and carry out co-researches with the other faculties, in order to increase the scientific collaboration. In light of this system, the one department had to study and plan for the needs of the various faculties in which its own specialization is studied.

The University used to have branches in Menya, Sohag, Qena and Aswan. But in the academic year 1976/1977, Faculties in Menya were separated from Assuit University, when Menya University had been established, according to Law No, 93/1976.

Faculties in Souhag, Qena and Aswan were also separated from Assuit University, when South Valley University had been established, upon issuance of the Presidential Decree No. 22/1995.

Mansoura University

Ministry of Higher Education

Mansoura University

The idea of establishing Mansoura University was just a mere idea discussed among a number of the intellectuals and enlightened people in Daqahlia Governorate. Therefore, fund-raising began in 1951 in order to make that dream come true, and make the university an instrument for realizing the comprehensive development objectives in the Governorate at that time.

The University became a reality and was established in Mansoura City. The first academic year was 1962/1963 when the Faculty of Medicine was established. Then, it was followed by the Faculties of Science and Education at the academic year 1969/1970. And, in 1970/1971, Pharmaceutical Studies Section at the Faculty of Medicine was added, as affiliated to Cairo University.

The Supreme Council of Universities' Decree, adopted on the 15/11/1971 Session, stated that "amongst the objectives of the general policy of universities is spreading university education in various districts and governorates other than Cairo, Alexandria and Giza, since the expansion of Education, vertically and horizontally, is considered a fundamental base for improving and developing these areas, economically, socially and culturally". The Supreme Council of Universities emphasized, too, the independence of the regional branches of universities so as to become independent universities during a period of at least ten years after their establishment date.

In 1972, the Presidential Decree No. 49 was issued to establish the "East of Delta University" which, in 1973, was renamed into "Mansoura University", to be the sixth university established in Egypt.

Undoubtedly the conversion of Cairo University's Branch in Mansoura into an independent university, helped in realizing the required objective of establishing a number of practical faculties. Consequently, the project included the establishment of the Faculties of Agriculture and Engineering, whose nucleus was the Agricultural and Industrial branches within the Higher Institute of Technology. The nucleus of the Faculty of Commerce was the Commercial Higher Institute in Mansoura. The Faculty of Dentistry was also established in light of this project.

Suez Canal University

Suez Canal University was established in 1976, upon issuance of the Presidential Decree No. 93/1976. The first academic year was 1977/1978.

The basic drive behind the establishment of this university was distinguished from that of the other Egyptian Universities, as it was oriented for the service of society: it serves a dear area of Egypt that used to be a battle field of national struggle against occupation for many years at the past.

In the wake of signing the Egyptian-Israeli Peace Treaty in 1977, the University was established, and the area of Suez and Sinai Governorates attracted the world attention.

Suez Canal University has a remarkable stand at the Suez Canal area. Five faculties were established at the beginning, then the number of faculties increased all over the three Governorates of the Canal area, as well as North and South of Sinai Governorates. The establishment of South Valley University was a necessity viewed as such by Egypt's intellectual circles. It was established upon issuance of the Presidential Decree No. 23/1995, to be located in Qena as an addition to the higher education edifices in Egypt. Private Universities

Within the framework of the State's interest in expanding university and higher education, the Government encourages the establishment of private universities, to be an additional stream to the state higher education institutions, so that students would be admitted either in state universities and educational institutions, or private universities. This generates a kind of competition essential for upgrading the level of education.

Law No. 101/1992 was issued stipulating the establishment of private universities including a number of items that ensure the best performance of these universities' tasks and responsibilities. On top of these items is the necessity of aiming at raising the standard of education and scientific research, in addition to encompassing unique and distinctive specializations that would be an addition to the already existing specializations provided by the state university education.

This Law was effective as of July 1996, upon issuance of four Presidential Decrees for the establishment of four private universities. Then, a number of private universities were established, which became 15 university in 2006/2007:

1- 6th of October University
2 - October University for Modern Sciences and Arts
3 - Misr University for Sciences and Technology
4 - Misr International University
5- The French University in Cairo
6- The German University in Cairo
7- The Ahram-Canadian University
8- The British University in Cairo
9- Modern University for Information and Technology
10- Sinai University in Aresh
11- Pharos University
12- Future University
13- Al-Nile University for Post-Graduate Studies
14- The Egyptian-Russian University
15- Al-Nahdha University (The first academic year was 2007/2008)

Upon issuance of the related Presidential Decrees, study began at private universities at different types of faculties. In order to encourage these universities to perform their duties as required, and in accordance with the decisions adopted later by the Supreme Council of Universities, a kind of cooperation was created between state and private universities, according to which, part- and full time secondment of a number of state universities' academic staff to the private universities was permitted.

Private Institutes

Private Institutes have for a long time been subject to the supervision of the Ministry of Education till the establishment of the Ministry of Higher Education in 1961, which assumed supervision of these institutions.

Students are admitted into higher institutions, only after completion of the secondary stage. They are required to hold the 'Thanaweya Amma' Certificate or its equivalent. Certain guiding principles have been set to ensure a well-organized performance and best achievement of these institutes' targeted missions.

Law No. 52/1970 was issued to organize the working procedures at the private higher institutes. The most important stipulations of which state the following:

- Any non-governmental educational establishment is considered a private higher institution, provided that it admits students who hold the secondary school completion certificate, the technical secondary school completion certificate, or its equivalent. The primary, or secondary, activity of the institution must be for educational purposes and technicians preparation, and the study duration must be two academic years, at least.
- It is permitted to establish private higher institutes serving certain areas of postgraduate studies, the affiliation of which and terms of admission are to be set in light of a decree issued by the Ministry of Higher Education.
- In this regard, the Ministerial Decree No. 107/1995 has been issued on the terms and conditions that must be fulfilled for the establishment of private higher and intermediate institutes, that are subject to the supervision of the Ministry of Higher Education.

Indeed, private education effectively contributes in the enhancement of the educational process. It has been for a long time oriented to the establishment of higher and intermediate social service institutes, higher agricultural or administrative cooperative studies institutes, or intermediate institutes for secretarial works. But, recently, private education has been re-oriented to new fields of specializations required by the labour market.

A close look on the structure of private institutions' types shows that they are divided into two types:

- Higher Private Institutes
- Intermediate Private Institutes

Ministry Of Higher Education

First: Private Higher Institutes:

This type of institutes has witnessed a great development during the recent years. They cover the following governorates: Cairo, Alexandria, Giza, Behera, Kafr Al-Sheikh, Qalubeya, Port-Said, Assiut, Souhag, Aswan, South Sinai, Marsa Matrouh, Daqahleya, Damietta, Sharqeya, Qena, Luxor, Red Sea.

Second: Private Intermediate Institutes:

This type of institutes, as the state technical institutes, is targeted to provide graduates of technicians specialized in the fields of social service, administration, secretarial works, computer. However, the increased interest of the private sector in establishing higher institutes has brought the establishment process of intermediate institutes to a standstill.

Within the same framework, developments have been effected regarding study at Abbaseya Institute for Computer and Administrative Sciences. This Institute grants an intermediate diploma after completion of the second year of study. In case a student passes the set exams with a total average grade "good", (s)he can continue study till the fourth year to get the B. Sc. Degree.

Al- Azhar University

Al-Azhar University is highly esteemed in the minds and hearts of the Egyptians, Arabs and Muslims as well, all over the world. Its sphere is considerably expanded not only to absorb Egyptian students, but also to embrace their counterparts from all the Islamic countries.

Since the establishment of Al-Azhar Masjid, prayers were performed at its yards for the first time on the seventh of Ramadan (the holy month), in 361 A.H (22nd June, 972 A.D). This masjid acquired great reputation through all ages, thus is considered not only the most famous masjid in the Islamic world, but the most ancient university, as well, where religious and secular sciences are taught. Once it was established, seminars of the Islamic theologians began to be convened, where the academic pattern was adopted from the outset, such as the free academic discussions, study leaves, honorary leaves, demonstrators system, visiting professors and all the other aspects of the academic life which Al-Azhar applied for centuries, and was considered the basis of academic traditions and regulations that were adopted afterwards in the east and the west. Thus, Al- Azhar is considered the most ancient theological university in the entire world.

A number of laws were issued to organize the academic studies at Al- Azhar University, as follows:

- In 1872, the first regulatory law for Al-Azhar was issued, stipulating the academic pattern to get the degree of "Alameya" and defining its subjects of study. This law was an important academic breakthrough in organizing the didactic life at Al-Azhar in the nineteenth century.
- In 1930, Law number 49 was issued to organize study in Al-Azhar, its institutes and faculties, stipulating that higher education at Al-Azhar should include the following faculties:

1- Faculty of Islamic Theology (Dogma)
2- Faculty of Jurisprudence
3- Faculty of Arabic Language

- On 05th May 1961, Law No. 103/1961 was issued to organize Al-Azhar University and its institutions. In light of this Law, Al-Azhar University was established, and for the first time a number of academic faculties were initiated: Faculties of Commerce, Medicine, Engineering and Agriculture.

- Moreover, doors were opened for the Muslim women to get a study opportunity after the establishment of the Faculty of Girls, which included on its outset sections for studying: Medicine, Commerce, Science, Arabic and Islamic Studies and Humanities.

The modern academic faculties of Al-Azhar University are characterized, among its peers, by their great interest in the Islamic studies, in addition to other specialized ones.

At the present time, Al-Azhar University encompasses 60 Faculties, of which 43 are for males and 17 for females. It also encompasses a number of scientific and research centres, some of which are:

- Abd Allah Saleh Center for Trade and Islamic Studies and Researches

The Arab Academy for Science, Technology and Maritime Transportation

Its establishment, as a regional institute, was just a mere proposal discussed during the Transportation Committee meeting in the Arab League on 11/03/1970. In its session No. 53, the Arab League Council issued Decree No. 2631/1970, on the establishment of a regional center for training on maritime transportation's works for navigation control and marine engineering, radio and electronics. The Decree stipulated mandating the Egyptian Government, on behalf of the Arab States, to demand a technical support from the UN Specialized Organizations in the field of maritime transportation. In this regard, the UNDP (United Nations Development Program) prepared a project proposal for establishing the Arab Academy for Science, Technology and Maritime Transportation in Alexandria, in collaboration with the Maritime Consultation Organization for Governments, acting as the implementing agency of the project, and the UN Convention on Trade and Development as the co-sponsoring agency. The Egyptian Government signed the project document in 1972, and provided all assets of the academy at that time.

On 09/11/1974, the Arab States signed an agreement on the establishment of the Arab Academy for Maritime Transportation, then, the Presidential Decree No. 532/1975 was issued for the endorsement of the agreement on 29/05/1975

In 1989, the Arab Ministers of Transportation decided that the academy would depend on self financing, starting 01/01/1990, hence, the Arab States' contributions for the academy were frozen.

Afterwards, the Academy expanded its scope of specializations to include engineering and administration. The Economic Social Council agreed on modifying the agreement of the academy's establishment (Decree No. 1391 on 16/09/1999), and the Arab League Council endorsed the modification (Decree No. 5984 on 28/03/2000), which was put into effect on 28/04/2000. This modification supported its status and strengthened its continuity in achieving its main objectives to support the maritime sector in the Arab States, based on self financing.

In view of the modification agreement, too, the educational scopes were widened to meet the needs of the Arab States' citizens in the fields of maritime transportation, administrative sciences and advanced applied engineering. It was renamed into "the Arab Academy for Sciences, Technology and Maritime Transportation", to include all the developed new fields, with stressing the principle of self financing, as the Academy is one embodiment of the joint Arab actions.
